

Frank Mather, Analysis and Policy Planning, Directorate General Information Society, European Commission

Frank Mather is responsible for broadband policy development in the Directorate General for the Information Society and Media at the European Commission in Brussels. He has extensive experience of Internet related policy having been with the Commission since 1990 and worked on all major EU information society initiatives. Prior to joining the Commission was a lecturer in Economics at Glasgow and Cambridge Universities, worked as an economic consultant and has contributed to a range of projects in the public and private sectors.